

Foreplay in a Row™

UP, DOWN, AND ALL AROUND FOREPLAY!

How to Play: Foreplay in a Row is played on a vertical board with 7 columns and 6 rows. The players have 21 chips each, distinguished by color, pink for her and white for him. Each colored chip has either a sex or foreplay activity printed on it. White chips represent activities that she would perform on him and pink chips represent activities that he would perform on her.

Players take turns dropping chips with the activity of their choice in one of the empty spaces. A player wins by placing four of their own chips consecutively in a vertical, horizontal, or diagonal line. The activities on the chips must then be acted out by the losing player (on the winning player). If the board is completely filled without any player winning, that game will end in a draw and you must start over.

Object: The object of Foreplay in a Row is to become the first player to arrange four chips in a row.

Strategy & Tactics: It's important to always check all vertical, horizontal and diagonal lines before making a move. As a general rule of thumb, chips played in the center columns are more valuable than border chips because they participate in more potential four-chip lines (and accordingly limit the opponents opportunities). A good tactic is to connect three chips, thereby preventing the opponent from playing in a certain column.
