Restraint Play-Specific:

- Avoid fastening restraints so tightly that they restrict blood flow or cut off circulation.
- Avoid placing restraints directly on joints or sensitive areas that may cause injury.
- Ensure that restraints can be undone or released quickly if required.
- Never leave a restrained partner unattended. It is essential to maintain constant communication and monitor their physical and emotional well-being throughout the session.
- Regularly check for circulation, breathing, and signs of distress. If any concerns arise, immediately release the restraints and provide necessary care.

Under the Mattress Restraint

- With the straps unfurled but cuffs unattached, slide the restraints under your mattress, positioning the central ring roughly in the middle. Pull out all the straps from under the mattress and clip on the cuffs. Once your partner is cuffed, you can adjust the straps to give their limbs some wriggle room... or not.
- When fastening the cuffs on your partner's wrists and ankles, ensure they are not so tight that they restrict blood flow or cause discomfort.
